

No One Man Should Have All That Power

The Real Story of the KGB's Plot to Kill the Pope and the President

In the annals of history, there are few plots as audacious and chilling as the KGB's plan to assassinate Pope John Paul II and President Ronald Reagan. This gripping account, based on extensive research and interviews, reveals the inner workings of the Soviet Union's secret service and the lengths to which it would go to achieve its goals.

No One Man Should Have All That Power begins with the rise of Yuri Andropov, a ruthless and ambitious KGB officer who became General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in 1982. Andropov was determined to restore the Soviet Union's superpower status, and he saw the assassination of the Pope and the President as a way to destabilize the West and sow chaos.

The KGB's plot was complex and involved a network of agents, informants, and assassins. The plan called for the Pope to be killed during a visit to the Philippines, and for Reagan to be assassinated at the White House. However, the plot was foiled by a combination of luck, good intelligence, and the intervention of the Vatican's security forces.

No One Man Should Have All That Power is a fascinating and terrifying look into the world of espionage and international intrigue. This book is a must-read for anyone interested in history, politics, or espionage.
