The story begins in the Great Plains of North America, where a large buffalo herd roams freely. The herd is led by a wise old bull named Thunder. Thunder has seen many winters and knows the dangers that lie ahead.

One day, a group of hunters arrive on the Great Plains. The hunters are armed with guns and are determined to kill as many buffalo as they can. The buffalo herd is forced to flee, and they soon find themselves in unfamiliar territory.

Despite the challenges they face, the buffalo herd never gives up hope. They work together to protect their young, and they learn to rely on each other for support. Thunder, the old bull, provides wise counsel and guidance, and he helps the herd to stay strong.

Eventually, the buffalo herd finds a new home in a remote valley. The valley is lush with grass and water, and it is free from predators. The buffalo herd is finally able to rest and heal from their long journey.
