We Planted Trees is an inspiring story about a group of children who made a difference in their local community. The book follows the true story of Diane Muldrow, a young girl who was inspired to plant trees after reading a book about the environment. Diane's story is a reminder that anyone can make a difference, no matter how small.

The book begins with Diane and her classmates learning about the importance of trees. They learn that trees provide oxygen, food, and shelter for animals. They also learn that trees help to clean the air and water. Inspired by what they have learned, Diane and her classmates decide to plant trees in their local community.

Diane and her classmates work together to plant trees in parks, schools, and other public spaces. They also plant trees in their own backyards. Over time, the children's efforts make a big difference in their community. The trees they plant help to clean the air and water, provide food and shelter for animals, and make their community a more beautiful place to live.

We Planted Trees is a heartwarming story that shows the power of children to make a difference. The book is also a great way to teach children about the importance of trees and the environment. This book can be read to children ages 5-10.
